TEACHING EXPERIENCE

MHS-180-01 (Racial and Ethnic Health Disparities), Vanderbilt University Center for Medicine, Health and Society (Fall 2013-present). (MHS 290-15: Race, Ethnicity and Health, Spring 2013). Relationship between health outcomes and race and ethnicity. Historical and contemporary factors influencing differences in health outcomes, including mental health, HIV/AIDS, and other chronic diseases. Explanations of health disparities and of strategies to reduce them.

MHS 290-14 (Men's Health Research), Vanderbilt University Center for Medicine, Health and Society (Spring 2014-present). (MHS 290-14: Research on Men's Health, Spring 2013). Examines why men's social and economic advantages do not translate to better health outcomes. We will explore global and domestic issues in men's health, particularly in Australia, Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States. By the end of the course, students will be able to articulate key concepts and theories that explain men's health, differentiate strategies to improve men's health, understand relationships between cultural values and health policy and describe how cultural explanations for men's health outcomes shape advertising around various men's health services and campaigns. This course is open to all who are interested in understanding how to begin systematically thinking about and addressing men's health and men's health disparities.

HBHE 622 (Program Evaluation in Health Education), University of Michigan, School of Public Health, Department of Health Behavior and Health Education (Fall 2009-Winter 2012). The primary objective of this one-semester, three-credit course is to provide a forum for preparing students to examine the methods public health professional use to determine whether and how a program "works". The course covers fundamentals of study design, the framing of evaluation questions, basic quantitative and qualitative data analysis techniques for assessing program processes and outcomes.

HBHE 613 (Men's Health/ Men's Health Disparities), University of Michigan, School of Public Health, Department of Health Behavior and Health Education (Fall 2008-Winter 2012). Men's health disparities is an emerging area of research that examines how the gendered nature of society differentially influences men's health. The field of men's health includes the investigation of: (1) conditions that are unique to men, (2) diseases or illnesses that are more prevalent in men, (3) health problems for which risk factors are different in men, and (4) health issues for which different interventions are required for men. While gender has been identified as a critical factor in women's health, the social and cultural construction of gender and its implications have not garnered as much attention in men's health.

HBHE 632 (Racial/ Ethnic Health Disparities Research & Interventions), University of Michigan, School of Public Health, Department of Health Behavior and Health Education (Winter 2008-Winter 2012). I am teaching this interdisciplinary master's-level course that will help to prepare students to develop and implement interventions to address racial and ethnic health disparities. The course provides students with a fundamental working knowledge of key concepts and terms, historical events, and contemporary topics relevant to providing a broad and comprehensive foundation for examining scientific literature and conducting basic and intervention research on racial and ethnic health disparities.

HBHE 702 (Reducing Racial/ Ethnic Health Disparities), University of Michigan, School of Public Health, Department of Health Behavior and Health Education (Fall 2005-Winter 2007). I taught (05-06) and co-taught (with Harold Neighbors, Ph.D.) (06-07) this interdisciplinary doctoral seminar that focuses on the concept of population health and health disparities between racial/ethnic groups within the United States. It emphasizes social and historical factors that influence the health of populations and their contributions to racial or ethnic health disparities, and examines strategies for intervening to reduce racial/ethnic disparities in health.

HBHE 242 (Health Education Field Practicum), University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, School of Public Health, Department of Health Behavior and Health Education (May 2003 – December 2003). Co-taught (with Eugenia Eng, Dr.P.H.) an individualized, health education field-based course on community-based participatory research and evaluation.

HBHE 240 (Foundations of Health Education Practice) and HBHE 241 (Action-Oriented Community Diagnosis), University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, School of Public Health, Department of Health Behavior and Health Education (September 2002 - June 2003). Co-taught (with Eugenia Eng, Dr.P.H. and Karen Moore, M.P.H.) a required masters-level course on community-based participatory assessment and evaluation, using methods from anthropology and epidemiology to help public health educators plan community-based practice and research. We trained and mentored students working in teams with university and community preceptors to conduct qualitative interviews and focus groups and to present the data back to the community in a community forum.

HONORS AND AWARDS

Tom Bruce Award (2013). The Tom Bruce Award is presented by the Community-Based Public Health Caucus (CBPH) at the annual American Public Health Association (APHA) meeting in recognition of an individual's leadership in community-based public health and recognizes "an individual who has made a significant contribution to the CBPH Caucus and the CBPH Movement". Quoting from the award, Dr. Griffith's research on "eliminating health disparities that vary by race, ethnicity and gender" earned him his award. The Tom Bruce Award was established in 2006 by the CBPH Caucus of APHA to celebrate the work and the legacy of Dr. Bruce, who many in the CBPH Movement have called the "Father of CBPH." Past winners of the Tom Bruce Award include Meredith Minkler, Barbara Israel, Geni Eng, Bonnie Duran and Nina Wallerstein.
