More than Music City

Nashville comes by its ‘Music City’ nickname honestly, boasting four times as many music industry workers than any other city in the nation. But before ‘Music City,’ Nashville’s many higher education institutions fueled the city’s reputation as the ‘Athens of the South.’ Recent growth in healthcare management, corporate and professional services, information technology, manufacturing and distribution have once again raised up Nashville as a hub for knowledge and innovation. These diverse industries are supported by an increasingly youthful labor pool drawn to Nashville’s unique and fun culture.

Migration

The Nashville-Davidson-Murfreesboro-Franklin MSA has experienced one of the most rapid growth rates in the nation over the past several years. This explosion in population growth is driven by the city’s cultural scene, a cost of living just above the national average and the third lowest tax burden of any state in the country.

Migration data represents population gain per 10,000 LinkedIn members.

Urban growth: Millennials & Gen-Z

Nashville both attracts and retains young, educated residents, shown by the median ages of 33.9 in the city limits and 36.7 in the broader MSA. Trends indicate this median age will continue to fall below the national average of 38.1, especially in the urban core of Davidson County.

These younger employees act as a beacon for companies wanting to hire them, evidenced by an increase in technology-focused firms choosing to locate in downtown office towers. The past decade has seen a substantial increase in quality multi-family product built in and around the urban core to house these young Nashville residents.
At the 1897 Centennial Exposition to commemorate the founding of Tennessee, the City of Nashville constructed a full-scale replica of the ancient Greek Parthenon, celebrating the city’s many institutes of higher education and symbolizing Nashville’s status as the ‘Athens of the South.’ Over the past 120 years, use of the moniker has waned, but the colleges and universities remain.

The crown jewel of these institutions is Vanderbilt University, the 14th-ranked university in the United States according to U.S. News & World Report. Nashville is also the proud home of two leading Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs): Fisk University and Tennessee State University. Other notable institutions include Belmont University, Lipscomb University and Middle Tennessee State University, located 45 minutes southeast of Nashville in Murfreesboro.

Cost of living

Despite rising housing and rental costs in the Nashville MSA, the metro’s cost of living remains just above the national average. Nashvillians also benefit from living in one of nine states in the nation without a state or local income tax. This lack of income tax contributes to Tennessee having the third lowest per capita tax burden* in the country. The low cost of living, plus a higher-than-average net take-home pay, entices talent to live and remain in Nashville.

Quality of life

Culture

Nashville, known around the world as Music City, boasts the highest concentration of music industry workers in the country. Home to more than 120 live music venues, live music can be found 365 days a year in the city. This musical identity has no doubt contributed to Nashville’s explosive growth in recent years as music fans from around the country—and the world—want to be in the center of an entertainment mecca.

Parks & recreation

The Metro Parks Department oversees 10,710 acres of greenspace consisting of 100 stand-alone parks, 25 tennis courts and seven municipal golf courses. The department also manages the Centennial Sportsplex with an Olympic-size swimming pool and two skating rinks. Nearly all of Nashville’s parks are connected to almost 100 miles of greenways and bike paths, making Nashville the ideal urban environment for lovers of outdoor recreation. In addition to these city-owned properties, residents and visitors can enjoy 50 acres of botanical gardens at Cheekwood Estate & Gardens and 1,368 acres of pristine wilderness at Radnor Lake State Park.
Nashville also hosts two of the “big four” professional sports leagues: the NFL’s Tennessee Titans and the NHL’s Nashville Predators. Nashville recently became the latest city to join the MLS expansion party when Nashville SC joined the league. The city is also home to a Minor League Baseball team, the Nashville Sounds, an affiliate of the Milwaukee Brewers AAA.

All four of these professional sports teams play their home games in or near downtown Nashville. The Titans play at Nissan Stadium, directly across the river from downtown with a view of the city skyline. The Predators play at Bridgestone Arena on Broadway in the middle of the honky-totks and live music venues. The Sounds play at First Horizon Park in the Millennial-rich Germantown neighborhood just north of downtown. Nashville SC currently plays at Nissan Stadium while their purpose-built Fairgrounds Stadium goes up in the similarly Millennial-rich neighborhood of Wedgewood-Houston just south of downtown; Fairgrounds Stadium is slated to be the largest soccer-specific stadium in the U.S. These teams and their stadiums provide a way for Nashville’s melting pot of residents moving from all over the country to feel a shared sense of pride in their new city.
Nashville’s music scene is also a major contributor to the MSA’s work force, accounting for 32,000+ employees and $15.9 billion in local economic impact each year. Music industry businesses are primarily concentrated in the Music Row neighborhood within the Midtown office submarket. Historically, the neighborhood has not catered to businesses outside of the music industry, but exploding levels of development in the Downtown market have driven up demand for Midtown office space. The development pipeline is now filled with mid-rise office buildings on or near Music Row, attracting tenants from both within and outside the music industry.

The healthcare sector dominates the Nashville market, directly employing 125,000 people in the region. Nashville’s three for-profit healthcare companies, HCA, HAI and GCC, are responsible for a nation-wide shift in the hospital industry where hospitals transformed from clusters of small community systems into a centralized industry.

Nashville’s rapidly growing and increasingly educated talent pool has attracted several high-profile professional services firms to the region in recent years.

- The nation’s largest e-commerce company will be opening the doors on the first phase of their 5,000-employee operations center in 2021.
- AllianceBernstein moved their international headquarters from New York City to downtown Nashville in 2020, with 1,050 jobs in tow.
- Bridgestone Americas moved their corporate operations headquarters to Nashville in 1992 and relocated to a brand new built-to-suit 30-story tower downtown in 2017.

These high-profile relocations/expansions just scratch the surface of the growth in the professional services sector seen in the past decade. Other businesses are likely to follow these companies to take advantage of Nashville’s educated talent pool and Tennessee’s business friendly environment.

Notable relocations & satellite expansions:
Nashville, not known as a traditional tech market, has seen rapid growth in the sector in recent years. Tech companies are attracted to the metro’s vibrant culture and young, educated workforce. Nashville’s established and robust healthcare industry is also contributing to tech job growth in the region. A 2019 report by MTSU found that one third of the more than 38,000 tech job postings in the region were for healthcare or healthcare-adjacent technology companies.

In April 2021, Oracle announced a $1.2 billion investment into a Nashville office, creating 8,500 jobs by the end of 2031. The presence of this tech giant will surely lead to ancillary demand for tech jobs.

Nashville added more than 10 million square feet of office space from 2009-2020, split nearly evenly between the CBD and the suburbs, with the CBD development focused almost entirely on the periphery of the downtown core in The Gulch, Midtown, SoBro, Germantown and Wedgewood-Houston. Developers and tenants are attracted to these “periphery” sites due to their distance from the areas with heavy numbers of tourists as well as their proximity to multi-family housing and other amenities.

Direct asking rates rose sharply from 2014-2018, coinciding with the city’s most rapid period of population growth. Rents fell just 0.7% during the COVID-19 pandemic, outperforming the national average during that time.

Infrastructure

Occupying a central location, Nashville is located within a 650-mile radius of 65% of the U.S. population.

One of only six U.S. cities with three converging major interstate legs:
- Interstate 40, with connectivity to Knoxville, Raleigh, Memphis, Little Rock and Oklahoma City
- Interstate 24, with connectivity to St. Louis and Atlanta (via Chattanooga)
- Interstate 65, with connectivity to Chicago, Indianapolis, Louisville, Birmingham and Mobile

Nashville International Airport (BNA)

Vision BNA Plan is a $1.4B expansion and renovation that includes a new international arrivals facility, new parking facilities, an on-site hotel and runway expansions to accommodate additional traffic. The project is on track to be completed by the end of 2023.

In June of 2019, Delta announced that BNA would be a “focus city” airport for the airline, thus increasing the number of direct origins and destinations possible for Nashville.

Outlook: Three trends to watch

#1 Nashville’s growth and economic success translates into huge demand for office space.

#2 Downtown tenants are migrating to new construction in the Midtown market and other sites on the downtown “periphery.”

#3 Vacancy rates remain higher in the suburban submarkets, but there are signs of a forthcoming recovery once the COVID-19 pandemic subsides.
