Workplace Injury—Steps to Take

In the event an employee is injured at work, he/she is to report the injury to his/her supervisor immediately or as soon as is practical.

Upon being notified of the injury, the supervisor is to complete an online web-based form located at the Human Resources site under the workers' compensation policy page.

If the injury requires medical attention;

The supervisor directs the employee to the Vanderbilt Occupational Health Clinic (VOHC).

For injuries requiring immediate care after hours or on weekends when VOHC is closed, the supervisor directs the employee to the Adult Emergency Department (ED).

When medical care is required away from campus, the employee reports to the nearest medical provider walk-in clinic for minor injuries.

For a serious injury, 911 should be called in order to secure immediate medical attention at the nearest emergency department.

Time spent in the initial medical visit due to a compensable work-related injury is considered work time. Once seen, a determination will be made to send the employee home or return him/her to work.
