

Evaluating Patient and Parent Reported Quality of Life in Children with Interstim

- Sacral nerve stimulation is a relatively new surgical technique to treat urinary symptoms in children with bladder dysfunction, only having been performed at Vanderbilt Children's Hospital since 2010. We wish to evaluate the improvement in urinary symptoms in children having undergone this procedure, while also examining the patient's perception of quality of life in comparison to the parent's perception of their child's quality of life.